Post-election analysis

(Source: GreenbergTraurig)

Though the final results of several close races will not be known for days, and in some cases weeks, yesterday's elections yielded significant gains for Republicans at both the federal and state level. A combination of factors including a weak economy, high unemployment, low presidential approval, and public disagreement with President Obama and the Democrats' agenda contributed to this outcome.

Did you know?

One in 5 Ohio children lives in poverty.

This result is consistent with predictions of a significant Republican wave that emerged over the last several months and crested last week.

Juvenile detention reform in Ohio

(Source: Juvenile Justice Coalition)

With support from the Annie E. Casey Foundation and the Cincinnati Bar Foundation, the Children's Defense Fund of Ohio, the Children's Law Center, Inc., the Juvenile Justice Coalition - Ohio and Voices for Ohio's Children are collaborating to increase awareness and support among key stakeholders and the general public for juvenile pretrial detention reform in Ohio with the release of two documents: Rethinking Juvenile Detention in Ohio Issue Brief outlining the current research and impact of juvenile pre-trial detention and Juvenile Detention Reform in Ohio Fact Sheet. Both documents support the adoption of alternatives that will keep youth out of pretrial detention whenever possible, while maintaining community safety.

Research shows that:

- Pretrial detention is an expensive option that does little to help juveniles or keep the community safe.
- Detention reform saves scarce public dollars and redirects resources toward more cost-effective, community-based alternatives to confinement.
- Jurisdictions employing detention alternatives have found reductions in the following: juvenile crime, the number of youth in long-term incarceration, costs associated with the juvenile justice system, and disproportionate minority contact.

Ronald Browder, Executive Director of the Children's Defense Fund - Ohio, said, "It is time to move beyond the research findings and begin to implement the alternatives that have been proven to make a positive impact on both the youth and community."

Five Ohio counties are participating in the Juvenile Detention Alternatives Initiative (JDAI), a nationally recognized model created by the Annie E. Casey Foundation to promote detention reform. The model is being implemented in Ohio under the leadership of the juvenile courts in Cuyahoga, Franklin, Lucas, Montgomery and Summit counties and the Ohio Department of Youth Services. This initiative is an opportunity to improve the front-end of the juvenile justice system based on research and evidence-informed practices, as part of larger juvenile justice reforms in Ohio.

"The Juvenile Justice Coalition believes that by implementing the JDAI in Ohio, we will make great progress in improving our juvenile justice system, since the initiative starts at the entry point," explained Sharon Weitzenhof, the Director of the Juvenile Justice Coalition.

"Implementing counties will have a chance to take leadership in Ohio by developing innovative and collaborative methods to reach the JDAI goals with the support of the expertise from the Annie E. Casey Foundation," said Angela Chang, staff attorney for the JDAI Defender Project, Children's Law Center. "JDAI is a unique process that will also bring together parties that may have been historically adversarial to the table to work together collaboratively to reach these common goals in their communities."

The policy brief and accompanying fact sheet highlight JDAI's goals of reducing over-reliance on juvenile pretrial detention without jeopardizing public safety, obtaining better outcomes for youth through better assessment and alternatives, promoting effective legal representation at the detention hearing stage, and reducing over-representation of youth from communities of color in the system.

Pew Inventory of State Home Visiting Programs

In 2010, the Pew Center on the States surveyed state agency leaders in an effort to inventory state home visiting programs in all 50 states and the District of Columbia. Policy makers now have - for the very first time - a much-needed account of state and national home visiting investments and program strategies.

The resulting Pew Home Visiting Inventory provides state leaders, agency administrators and program directors with a state-by-state and national snapshot of home visiting programs, models and funding.

This new resource will help state and federal policy makers evaluate current home visiting approaches, compare systems across states, prepare for the upcoming infusion of federal home visiting grant dollars and make informed decisions to ensure the best results for families and strongest returns to taxpayers.

Voices staff member Gayle Channing Tenenbaum (right) and Voices board member Dr. John Duby presented keynote addresses at the Early Childhood Mental Health and Early Childhood Education Institute conference Oct. 27-29 in Columbus.

In Tenenbaum's opening-day address, she gave a "snapshot" of mental health in Ohio today, but she was quick to remind conference attendees to stay focused on solutions.

During Duby's presentation, "Social and Emotional Health: Building the Foundation for Success," he spoke of the Adverse Childhood Experiences Study and bridging the gap between childhood trauma and its negative consequences later in life. (Download Duby's presentation.)

Foster Care Alumni of America Thanksgiving events

For young people in and from foster care, the holidays are often a harsh reminder of lost connections. We miss the comfort of knowing we have a place where we are always welcome, year after year. For this reason, for the past three years, Thanksgiving has been a time for Ohio foster care youth, alumni and allies/adult supporters to gather together.

In November 2010, we are holding Thanksgiving events in Southwest, Northeast and Central Ohio.

COHAT hosts legislators in Dayton

In partnership with the Sinclair Community College (Dayton) dental hygiene clinic, the Children's Oral Health Action Team (COHAT) hosted two legislators and one legislative staff member for a dialogue on children's oral health Oct. 20. State Rep. Seth Morgan, State Rep. Roland Winburn and Gary Abernathy, an aide to U.S. Sen. George Voinovich, toured the center. COHAT member Jeanne Huber, Ohio Dental Hygienist Association, was instrumental in connecting COHAT with the center in Dayton. The visit highlighted the work of dental hygienists working with a dentist to provide access to oral health services to children in the community.

Cuyahoga County budget update

On Jan. 1, Cuyahoga County will have a new government structure that faces many challenges. At the top of the list will be a county budget with a potential $19 million deficit and an economic recovery that shows little sign of speeding up. Like other counties in Ohio, resources are dwindling while the need for public services is rising.

2009 and 2010 saw cuts and costs savings in a variety of programs affecting children and families including residential placement, the Kids Hotline, Help Me Grow and Early Start's prenatal services. Lagging sales and property tax receipts have 2011 projected revenues at $305 million, their lowest level in the last 10 years. That figure does not include cuts from the state to the local government fund which are almost certain given the deficit the state budget faces.

Many are looking to savings from the new government structure to help fill the county deficit with the combining of positions and streamlining of administrative functions. While those savings may be realized in the long term, the County Executive and Council are likely to be working with a budget passed on from the current county commissioners for at least the first quarter.
